Reason for Reorganization

Virginia is facing unprecedented changes in the way behavioral health and developmental disability services are delivered to its citizens as a result of: an increase in individuals who need community-based behavioral health and developmental disability services; rapid growth in the scientific understanding of behavioral health and treatment options available; the expansion of Medicaid coverage allows more individuals to afford treatment; and building out the quality, case management and crisis systems as set forth in the U.S. Department of Justice Settlement. The Department of Behavioral Health and Developmental Services is responsible for shepherding the transformation of Virginia's behavioral health and developmental disability system. To be successful in our mission, the organizational structure of the agency was adapted to better meet the changing needs of the Commonwealth.

There are three major themes to the changes in the DBHDS organizational structure:
- DBHDS leaders now have a span of control that is manageable and supports Agency operations. Behavioral Health Community Services and Facility Services each have their own deputy and the commissioner will have nine direct reports.
- The Agency's structure supports how services will be delivered in the future. Finance, IT and Human Resources are crucial, enterprise-wide functions and report to a Deputy of Administrative Services.
- The chief deputy now leads the Community Behavioral Health Services because this division will grow in size, complexity and impact over the next decade.
- The Agency's structure required some new roles. The role of Medical Director adapted to the position of Chief Clinical Officer, who is responsible for quality improvement and leads the collaboration with DMAS and The Farley Center to transform our behavioral health system in Virginia. Services such as housing, case management, crisis services, and supported employment span the disability continuum and evolved to the point that one director leads an integrated team of mental health, developmental disability, and substance use disorder staff.
